Psychology of Female Offending: Sex, Lies and Violence

Presenter: Eric W. Hickey, Ph.D.

Training Description

This professional practice training in the psychology of female offending is designed especially for professionals in law enforcement, psychology, law, mental health, counseling, victimology, and other practitioners interested in the psychological motivations and behavioral characteristics of female sex offenders, (specifically those who use their professional positions as school teachers, school administrators and coaches to access victims), women as con artists and women as murderers. As a result of societal and cultural values female offenders often receive preferential treatment compared to male offenders committing the same crimes. The etiology, scope and psychopathology of female offending is explored through examination of motivations and documented case analysis. Special attention is given to techniques used by female offenders to manipulate victims and the process of victim selection. Women who are involved in crimes for financial gain also tend to display gender specific methods.

Training Objectives

1. Explore, through case analysis, the etiology of female sex offending toward students, their motivations, levels of psychopathology and victim-offender selection.
2. Examine, through case analysis, the etiology of female violence, specifically related to murder, their motivations, levels of psychopathology and victim-offender selection.
3. Explore, through case analysis, the demographics and psychopathology of females who engage in crimes for profit and their victim-offender relationships.
4. Examine the social and cultural influences that permit and encourage differential treatment of women as offenders pertaining to school teachers and women who kill.
